Attend Headstart

Four Andover children are attending Operation Headstart classes underway in Lawrence and Methuen for Greater Lawrence children.

One is enrolled for class at West School in South Lawrence and three travel by bus to classes held at Marsh Corner School, Methuen.

Miss Anne D. Minahan, Headstart director, reports that two other Andover children registered for the pre-school training but have not attended thus far.

This year's program is a project of the Lawrence Community Action Council, a Poverty Program organization. Last summer five Andover children were enrolled for classes held in Methuen for Andover, North Andover and Methuen children.

Children who attend this program of pre-school orientation are supposed to come from low income, disadvantaged families. The idea is to prepare such youngsters educationally, socially and physically to participate in benefit from their first year of public school.

Headstart classes are being held at six Lawrence schools and the Methuen school.

'Round & 'Round It Goes

Town Hall Topic Is Perennial

(A Townsman News Feature)

At a June meeting of the committee appointed to draw a five-year plan for construction of municipal facilities, Selectman Philip K. Allen urged decision on a town hall site with the comment: "If we don't do something soon, I'm afraid we'll remain at dead center all summer."

Further prodding the committee, which is dominated by the five-member Board of Selectman, Austin Anderson of the Chamber of Commerce commented that the whole long drawn out town hall affair was becoming laughable and that the selectmen would be doing themselves and this community a disservice if they did not come to a prompt conclusion.

The committee did vote that night and a week later the Selectmen concurred with the majority view. They gave conditional approval to the Musgrove Building area as THE location for a municipal office building and authorized the town manager to have sketches drawn from which the selectmen could determine just how much of a heavily blighted area would have to be bought up to make room for a 21,000 sq. ft., "Colonial" town hall, plus adequate parking space for employees and visitors. The big IF? How much would it cost?

Informally proposed was the acquisition of properties appraised at upwards of $375,000. If the Musgrove site remains the favorite and if the whole of the area under consideration is finally decided upon as necessary or desirable, voters can expect to be called together for a special town meeting sometime this fall. Officials have had $550,000 on tap for construction of a town hall since the March 1965 town meeting, but they do not have a red cent for site acquisition.

But it is far from certain that the site issue is so nearly settled as it seems. The board has been vacillating ever since the vote was taken and furthermore, it must be remembered that Selectman Robert A. Watters has never moved from his position that the office building should go somewhere in the area of the municipal parking lot.

His latest suggestion was to put the building sideways on land now held by Danton Realty Trust (the old Killorin property), facing the parking lot.

(It now appears to be too late for that, however. Danton contractors have begun jacking the former residence for relocation on the back of the property preparatory to construction of a $100,000 retail and office building facing Main Street. The present building is to be converted to apartments. A dry cleaner, a stationer and the Andover Beer Mart will occupy first floor space in the new structure.)

And still in the background is the site committee decision that the town hall should go out of the center, probably adjacent to the high school, if the Musgrove location proves too costly.

But it doesn't stop there. People persist in mentioning new possibilities or resuggesting old ones.

Talk, Talk, Talk
The talk of what to do about Andover's town hall has been going on for at least fifteen years, but it has accelerated and continued

Giles To Begin Theater Project

Contractor G. Lincoln Giles has announced plans for transformation of the old Broadway theater at 100 Broadway, Lawrence, to a two-story office building and retail shopping center.

Giles has held the property since 1963 when he bought it with a view to reconstructing it as a motel. He reports that other motel construction in the area and building codes are responsible for his change in plans.

The contractor has already obtained a building permit for the project which is to involve $150,000 in new work. There is to be a small pool in the center of a glass enclosed mall off which shops and offices will be located. A central switchboard and receptionist are called for in plans.

Clash Seen Over Plans For Swamp

An Andover octogenarian and sometimes historian was busy this week stirring opposition to the proposal of Contractor John E. Magee for cleaning and filling approaches to Foster's Pond partly as a means of creating a recreational area for residents in his Morningside residential development, off County Road.

Miss Bessie P. Goldsmith, 60 Elm St., says that she and Magee hold to different philosophies about land use and conservation. She will air these differences at a public hearing to be held by the Board of Selectmen at 8:30 p.m. Monday in the town hall conference room. Miss Goldsmith owns some land abutting Magee's.

The hearing is scheduled to help the board collect information preparatory to the writing of a recommendation for the state Department of Natural Resources, the decision making agency in Hatch Act cases.

This will be the third time since the new law's passage that local officials have been involved. Such hearings must now be held when any land use is contemplated that might interfere with flood control or water supplies.

The Magee Construction Co., Inc., an Andover based concern, proposes the following:

The cleaning of a section of swamp or meadow land adjacent to the Morningside subdivision, the cleaning of Fries Brook in certain sections and the cleaning of a drainage easement running from Morningside Drive to a segment of Fosters Pond known as remained uninterrupted since 1962 when it was to be part of the urban renewal package of plans for revitalizing downtown Andover.

The discussion has come full circle more than once. For example: In August, 1962 the Planning Board was plumping for the recommendation of its consultant that the Musgrove Building location was the appropriate one for the new office building. But Harold King, and his board went along with the unanimous decision to place the building and a police station on the high ground in Elm Square then occupied by the Square Compass Club.

Through all this latest discussion, the Planning Board has supported the recommendation of its current consultant that the triangle of land referred to as the Barnard-Lally site, also in Elm Square, is the most ideal site available to the town.

And in the square, work is some 65 percent completed on a contemporary office building, the Standard International Building, which sits where the town fathers four years ago agreed the town hall should be situated.

There are other indications that while the talk goes 'round and round, Andover refuses to stand still.

The need for a new office building was established as early as 1944 when it was reported that "our present town office building is antiquated, poorly laid out, altogether too small to meet present day requirements and incapable of proper economical expansion."

World War II got in the way of the discussion then and an offer of two acres of land for $11,400 as a site.

Then in 1955 the construction of a $375,000 town hall was proposed for the Shaw barn area, now the working lot. And in 1962, urban renewal plans allocated $1.5 million as the total project cost for construction of a town hall, a police station and a central fire station.

The Musgrove Site
The latest news on the town hall project is that made last week by the Planning Board which has authorized its consultant to prepare sketches etc. in connection with a study of the Musgrove block as a potential town hall location and at the same time update, for comparative purposes, its data on the Barnard-Lally site.

This study is independent of that already undertaken by the manager's office at the request of the selectmen. Both will apparently endeavor to illustrate with graphic art just what a town hall might look like in various spots and how parking and other downtown projects might be handled to dovetail with the major midtown improvement.

Meanwhile Atty. Samuel Resnik, who owns the Musgrove building and much of the Post Office Avenue property involved in the municipal center proposal, remains silent on the subject.

He said this week: "I haven't had any proposition so I have nothing to say." Asked if he had any plans of his own for improvement of the Musgrove area that would be disrupted if the town initiated eminent domain proceedings, Resnik said, "I have thought about things, but have not come to any conclusions. Post Office Avenue, an unimproved street, is part of Resnik's holdings.

Arthur Helfetz, a relative of Atty. Resnik's and owner of a piece of property that overlooks Post Office Avenue, reports that he has held the location all these years figuring that if at any time something happened to interfere with the location of his finance company business on the first floor of the Musgrove Building he would have some place to go.

His only comment on the TH proposal was this: "Whoever had the broad plan in mind for Elm Street, Post Office Avenue etc. is looking far into the future. . . If they would push the building into the square (a town hall), it would correct a traffic problem and give them room to put up something that would set well in the center of town."

Neither Resnik nor Helfetz would comment on what they feel their properties are worth in the current market. Estimated fair market values, as reported by the town manager, are: for the Musgrove

Conservation Aid Reported

New policy changes in the Massachusetts Conservation Self-Help Program will permit communities in the future to be reimbursed for as much as 75 percent of the cost of an acquisition project through federal and state aid, according to an announcement by Commissioner of Natural Resources Charles H. W. Foster.

The new policies, which become effective July 1, also provide that any legally established Massachusetts community conservation commission that has been declared eligible by the federal government to receive aid from any federal conservation, outdoor recreation, or open-space program, shall be eligible to make application to the Commissioner of Natural Resources for reimbursement for acquisition under the Self-Help program.

Foster also said reimbursement under the Self-Help program to a community that has received preliminary approval from a federal aid, open-space, conservation or outdoor recreation program, shall not exceed 50 percent of the non-federal cost of acquisition.

In addition, Foster notified all local conservation commissions that a federally-approved project shall not necessarily mean the project will also receive approval by the state.

And, finally, the Department of Natural Resources, after July 1, 1967, will not consider any applications for assistance under the Self-Help programs unless the local conservation commission has previously filed with the Department a natural resource open-space and recreation plan for the whole community.

In A Word...

Glaucoma

For centuries, this word was applied not only to the disease as we know it today, but to cataracts and other eye disorders as well.

The term is composed of the Greek words glaukos, meaning "blue-grey" or "sea green," and the suffix oma, which denotes a diseased condition.

Hippocrates, Aristotle, and other ancients used the word to signify any disease of the eye in which normal blackness of the pupil was replaced by a greyish or greenish color.

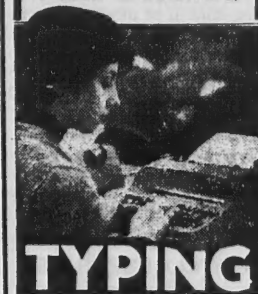

In 1709, Michel Brisseau, a Frenchman, distinguished between glaucoma and cataract. But not until 1808 was the true nature of glaucoma described by Jacques de Boron de Wenzel.

Foster also said reimbursement under the Self-Help program to a community that has received preliminary approval from a federal aid, open-space, conservation or outdoor recreation program, shall not exceed 50 percent of the non-federal cost of acquisition.

In addition, Foster notified all local conservation commissions that a federally-approved project shall not necessarily mean the project will also receive approval by the state.

And, finally, the Department of Natural Resources, after July 1, 1967, will not consider any applications for assistance under the Self-Help programs unless the local conservation commission has previously filed with the Department a natural resource open-space and recreation plan for the whole community.

Year-Round Home OK'd For Fosters Pond Road

The Zoning Board of Appeals has given permission for Irene J. Davis to build a year-round home on lot 24, Fosters Pond Rd., (Box 105), a property abutting that owned by Edward and Patricia A. Phillips on the one side and Fred A. Harris Jr. and Agnes Monroe on the other.

The lot is in a single residence C district in an area of general non-conforming use. The petitioner intends to remove a seasonal dwelling now located on the land and build a permanent home.

Because there are numerous other non-conforming situations in the area and because the board was of the opinion that Mrs. Davis' plans for the property would improve the existing situation, her petition was granted unanimously. Also cleared was the request of Ulisse DeRosa, 15 Lowell St.

who sought a special permit to allow a separate apartment at the DeRosa residence.

DeRosa proposes to convert a room on the second floor to a kitchen-dining area and add a sink and cooking facilities. A second exit must be provided, but other than that no exterior changes are involved.

The board handed down a unanimous decision, subject to the condition that the house may not be sold as a two-family dwelling.

The third unanimous ruling cleared a variance for Earl Efinger, 73 Lowell St., permitting expansion of a kitchen without the required side yard setback of 15 feet.

It was pointed out that the house itself is 14 feet from the side line and that the addition would be the same distance away.

Corporations and Taxation show that the gasoline tax at a rate of 14 1/2 cents a gallon brought in $1,244,430 for the year ending May 31, 1965, but that a 6-1/2 cent increase brought in $1,513,773 for the year ending May 31, 1966. Thus the penny increase, which became effective on May 13, 1965, largely accounted for an $18,219,334 jump in revenue. During the same 12-month period, Battles said, Bay State motorists also paid federal taxes of four cents a gallon which cost them $64,000,000 more.

Alma G. Amoroso, former director of professional information services for the Massachusetts division of the American Cancer Society, has been named program director for the Massachusetts Heart Assn. Mrs. Amoroso is a resident of Natick and a graduate of Children's Hospital School of Nursing and Simmons College.

Andover Summer School enrollment is 475, up 261 from a year ago. Responsible for a good share of the increase is the fact that 188 children signed to attend the town's first public school summer classes for elementary children.

The Andover Historic District Study Committee will hold its first meeting Aug. 1 at 8 p.m. in the conference room at town hall. The eight-member committee was appointed some weeks ago following the suggestion of S. Marcus Sweet who said that rapid development in downtown Andover seemed to indicate the need for creation of a historic district where important landmarks would be preserved.

In his advance presentation to the Board of Selectmen, Magee said that he has three purposes in mind.

The first is the collection of material from the pond suitable for landscaping the old gravel pit section of his subdivision. The second is to clean Fries Brook and certain sections of Fosters Pond as a private mosquito control project and encourage greater movement on the side of the pond near his development. And the third is to construct, if possible, a recreation facility for members of the Morningside community including a beach and a small cove for mooring boats. The work should result in increased water storage capacity for Foster's Pond, Magee's proposal states.

The contractor adds that he wants to fill portions of lots on Anna Road and Azalea Drive near the drainage easement on Fries Brook. He maintains that this would not interfere with the flow of water.

Foster's Pond is classified as a Great Pond by the State Department of Public Works and as such is open to the public for fishing, boating and swimming. If access can be had without passing over any privately improved land, a great pond is one that includes 10 acres of water in its natural state. Their use is governed by old Colonial laws which permit one to "fish and walk along the shore at low waterline so long as some public access to the shores is open.

New Bug Pest
Found In State

Charles H. McNamara, Commissioner, Massachusetts Department of Agriculture, has announced that the first find of the European chafer has been found in Massachusetts. An intensive trapping and detection program is now in progress to delimit the infestation, which is located mainly in the Metropolitan Boston area.

The European chafer is a damaging insect of meadows, pastures, lawns, turf, winter grain and legumes. The grubs of this insect feed on roots of plants. They create unsightly barren spots that make the soil subject to rapid erosion. Heavy infestations can cause serious crop damage.

The European chafer was first found in the United States in 1940 in Wayne County, New York. It is believed to have entered this country from Europe in the late 1920's or early 1930's. In 1951 an infestation of the pest was found in Meriden, New Haven County, Connecticut. In 1954 another infestation, now eradicated, appeared in Capon Bridge, West Virginia. In 1960 the first New Jersey infestation was found in the Jersey City-Bayonne area of Hudson County, and in 1963 the first Pennsylvania infestation was found in Erie County. In 1965 the pest was discovered in Ohio, New York State is the only area in this country where the European chafer occurs extensively. In Canada it is established in the vicinity of Niagara Falls, Ontario.

The Massachusetts Department of Agriculture has conducted surveys and trapping programs for this pest since 1960.

A Blue Ribbon Farce?

If other hearings held across the state to collect information for a Legislature contemplating Civil Service Reform produce as little critical comment as the session held in Lawrence last week, the whole procedure will prove a waste of time and money.

Had it not been for the detailed criticisms and suggestions offered by Andover's town manager and for the comments of a Methuen selectman and the top executive at Danvers State Hospital, the Blue Ribbon Commission might have left town feeling it had just sat in on a meeting of a well organized Civil Service Fan Club.

As it was, the commission did hear testimony from at least a few administrators willing to go on record as finding fault with certain aspects of the Commonwealth's Civil Service procedures. And they heard it in spite of the fact that a vocal veterans' clique attempted to focus full-time attention on just one issue — that of absolute veterans' preference.

Unfortunately those who spoke for reform represented the smaller communities in the Greater Lawrence network and they received no public support from the mayor or legislative representatives appearing for the major population center, the City of Lawrence. These officials contented themselves with the taking of a politically popular stand in favor of continued unconditional preference for veterans' in hiring.

The veterans' preference question is one that must be resolved if the state is to develop any sort of improved personnel system for the Commonwealth and its municipalities. No doubt about it. Informed critics claim this feature of the law discourages numbers of promising young people from seeking career positions in government at the very time when conditions demonstrate this state is in desperate need of a fresh cadre of well trained, dedicated public servants.

But this issue must not be allowed to develop as the theme for the battle cry of those opposed to any Civil Service reform. If it does, several other significant criticisms will be obscured by the smoke screen.

Perhaps such a state-dominated system of personnel administration is not, as was suggested at the hearing, effective when adapted for municipal use. Certainly it is in direct opposition to the principle of Home Rule to deliver the primary responsibility for hiring, firing and disciplining of many city and town employees into the hands of state officials. It seems practical to assume that municipalities could, within guidelines established for the protection of employee rights, develop systems of personnel administration more suited to varied local conditions. At least this is a possibility that should be fully explored by the General Court.

And further: It takes no special knowledge of Civil Service procedures for even the untutored citizen to deduce that there must be a need for improved recruitment and testing techniques. One has only to observe the caliber of people holding down some Civil Service jobs and to note the flurry of political boot-licking that precedes appointments from preference lists for certain types of positions in politically oriented communities to conclude that the state's Civil Service system does not always result in the hiring of the cream of the crop in the fairest possible manner.

These and a great many other factors must be studied in detail by the General Court's Blue Ribbon Commission if it is to recommend any legislative action that will be in the best interest of all the people of the State of Massachusetts.

Belated Comment

The Andover Chamber of Commerce deserves a word of praise for what it has made out of its annual Sidewalk Bazaar.

Sure the merchants make money on it, or at least work hard in the attempt. At its core, the bazaar is still a retail sales promotion deliberately scheduled to wheedle shoppers in an admittedly slack selling season.

But the Chamber has made something more of it. By drawing civic, fraternal and church organizations into the fray and providing them with an opportunity to raise funds for worthy projects, Andover businessmen have created the one event of the year that pulls people from every part of town into the center for some small town camaraderie.

For this single event, the people of Andover work together, visit up and down Main Street and laugh together in what must approximate the mood shared by oldtimers at corn huskings and box suppers. It is refreshing to see.

It just goes to show you. What is good for the Chamber can also be good for the townspeople.

A Senator Explains

Fish Protein Concentrate

From the Office of Senator Leverett Saltonstall.

More than half of the world's population is hungry. There is not the hunger we may feel before meal time, but chronic undernourishment resulting not alone from a lack of food but the lack of proper food. In many of the developing nations, the diet consists almost entirely of food derived from cereals or vegetables. These 2 billion people get no protein, and it is this majority of the world's population which is rapidly expanding so that each year the problem is compounded. The world population is expected to double in the next 40 years.

Here at home our principal source of protein is meat. It is in plentiful supply, and we presently export considerable quantities, principally to Europe. The people who most need the protein cannot afford high-cost meat. Where then are we to look for a low-cost supply of protein for today's hungry world and a supply that can be expanded to meet the rapidly growing need?

As we look at our globe, we are immediately struck by the fact that much of it is blue-oceans! More than 2/3 of the earth is underwater and in these waters is a self-replenishing source of protein. The Bureau of Commercial Fisheries of the United States Department of the Interior estimates that using present fishing methods, these unexploited ocean wildernesses could produce 500 billions pounds of fish annually without upsetting the natural balance of the seas.

More than 85 percent of this potential harvest goes to waste. More than 1/2 of the fish caught in the waters off our own shores are thrown overboard because there is no market for them. If we were to develop cultivation and harvesting techniques for the seas to match those which have been developed for agriculture, what might we reap from the oceans?

But this is solving only one part of our problem. The preservation, preparation, transportation of fish are expensive. For this reason this vast potential has not been exploited.

We know that there have been efforts to preserve fish from the beginning of recorded time. The wall decorations of early Egyptian tombs show pictures of servants curing fish with salt, the same process for salt cod that we remember being used at Gloucester. The ancient Greeks and Romans produced a seasoning from fish by reducing it to an amino acid concentrate. This process was never widely used in Western Europe, and it did not come to our country as a part of our basic diet. But it did spread to the Near and Far East and plays a very important role in the manufacture of fermented pastes and sauces made from fish and shrimp.

For some years, scientists have been experimenting with this latter type of process in an effort to find some method of extracting protein from fish that would provide an inexpensive diet supplement in those areas where the population is protein starved.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations recognized the valuable potential of this concept and United States manufacturers have developed techniques for extracting an almost pure protein concentrate from whole fish. Of course the entire New England Congressional Delegation was very much interested in this process, and a petition was made to the Food and Drug Administration of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to have the product declared acceptable for consumption in the United States. It would not be wise to send overseas a product that we did not consider good enough for ourselves even though there probably will never be much of a market for a protein concentrate here at home.

The Food and Drug Administration denied the petition on the grounds that any such product made from whole fish would be unacceptable on aesthetic grounds to the American consumer, even though the National Academy of Sciences found that "the process is safe, nutritional, wholesome, and fit for human consumption." Representatives from other coastal states and those who felt as we did, that a hungry world should not be deprived of this process, joined in an effort to find a means of convincing the FDA that an acceptable product could be made. I remember that Senator Douglas of Illinois made one of his most amusing and pointed speeches on fish protein concentrate. It was just after Halloween and the Senator arrived on the Senate floor with what looked like a trick or treat bag from which he produced, to the delight of the galleries, one after another product approved for domestic consumption by the FDA which apparently thought they were acceptable to the American public on aesthetic grounds. There were fried ants, chocolate covered bumblebees, whole octopi, snakes, snails and eels; a shopping list which must have substantially reduced the appetites of some Senators that evening.

The Bureau of Commercial Fisheries was authorized by the Congress to study the several methods of producing fish protein concentrate, establish an experimental plant at the University of Maryland and hopefully to establish standards for a product that would prove acceptable to the FDA. The experimental plant has concentrated on a solvent-extraction process based on the use of isopropanol, chemically related to an alcohol used in medicines and industrial dehydrating agents. White hake, plentiful in New England waters, has been used at the experimental plant.

The final product is a fine white salt-tasteless and odorless — that can be produced for about 7 cents a pound, a week's protein supply for an individual.

Another problem which we encountered resulted from a misnomer. Fish protein concentrate has been called "fish flour" and representatives of wheat-producing states have been antagonistic because they wrongly felt that FPC might somehow replace flour. This is not so. FPC cannot be used to bake a loaf of bread. It can be added to flour or to rice or whatever the basic local diet may be and provide the protein requirement.

A new application based on a process developed by the Bureau of Commercial Fisheries' plant is now pending before the FDA. The basic process has been approved although questions were raised concerning the solvent used to remove the fat. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare recently advised me that with additional information they would either resolve this final problem or recommend substitution of already approved solvent. So the hurdle that shortly after you receive the Report, this final hurdle will have been crossed.

Recently, the Senate voted to authorize the construction of pilot plants to investigate commercial production of FPC, using other methods and fish species. I hope that the House will concur in that action and that soon we will have one of these plants in operation in Massachusetts. Private industry is also very much interested in this product. We will not be first in the field. Already the Russians are producing FPC from fish taken from what we historically felt to be our fish grounds. A Swedish firm has an experimental plant, and several Latin American countries are actively engaged in the field.

Over the years, the American fishing industry has failed to keep up with worldwide developments. Some of our Massachusetts fish trawlers are as much as 75 years old. We do not have a single trawler to compete with the Soviet fleet which has been appearing off our shores in recent years. Legislation which I have cosponsored to create research and to assist fishing vessel construction has helped some, but our main problem has been economic. More than half of the fish the American eat is caught by foreign vessels. The cost of building a fish boat here is twice what it would cost to have it built abroad. Our young men are not attracted to the hard life and small pay of a fisherman at sea. The Russians overcome this by providing a four-year college course for young people to sign up for two years in the fishing fleet, and some of the fishing vessels resemble small ocean liners. We have a long way to go in updating our fishing industry, and I think that FPC may be one way of revitalizing our oldest domestic industry.

Approval of fish protein concentrate will mean a great step forward for our own fishing industry, but most important, it will mean hope for the billions who hunger every waking hour. When I first came to Washington I worked on so many fisheries problems that I received the nickname "Mr. Fish." I have a coffee cup as a symbol on my office door. I look toward retirement, but I am still working on fish and hope have helped this vital food industry over the years.

What Our Readers Say

To the Editor of the Townsman:

Thank you for printing Karl Hartz' letter (July 14) on Viet Nam. I think that now I agree with him. As a teenager, however, I must say that most of us find the world to be a confusing and perplexing place. On the one hand, we wish to obey the commandment "Thou shalt not kill any man."

On the other, we as Americans wish to help all men who seek freedom and equality obtain their human rights. Thus we, as have young American idealists before us, face a dilemma. Should we be faithful to the Commandments or to the ideals of our country? The conscience of some lies with the former — the result being the anti-war demonstrations.

cause they wrongly felt that FPC might somehow replace flour. The is not so. FPC cannot be used to bake a loaf of bread. It can be added to flour or to rice or to whatever the basic local diet may be and provide the protein requirement.

approved although questions were raised concerning the solvent used to remove the fat. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare recently advised me that with additional information they would either resolve this final problem or recommend substitution of an already approved solvent. So the that shortly after you receive the Report, this final hurdle will have been crossed.

Recently, the Senate voted to authorize the construction of pilot plants to investigate commercial production of FPC, using other methods and fish species
I hope that the House will concur in that action and that soon we have one of these plants in operation in Massachusetts. Private industry is also very much interested in this product. We will not be first in the field. Already the Russians are producing FPC from fish taken from what we consider to be our fish grounds. A Swedish firm has an experimental plant, and several Latin American countries are actively engaged in the field.

Over the years, the American fishing industry has failed to keep up with worldwide developments.
Some of our Massachusetts fishtrawlers are as much as 75 years old. We do not have a single trawler to compete with the Soviet fleet which has been appearing off our shores in recent years. Legislation which I have cosponsored to increase research and to assist in fishing vessel construction has helped some, but our main problem has been economic. More than half of the fish the American eat is caught by foreign vessels.
The cost of building a fishing boat here is twice what it would cost to have it built abroad. Our young men are not attracted to the hard life and small pay of a fisherman at sea. The Russians overcome this by providing a four-year college course for young people to sign up for two years in the fishing fleet, and some of the fishing vessels resemble small ocean liners. We have a long way to go in updating our fishing industry, and I think that FPC may be one way of revitalizing the oldest domestic industry.

Approval of fish protein concentrate will mean a great forward for our own fishing industry, but most important, it means hope for the billions who hunger every waking hour.

When I first came to Washington I worked on so many fishing problems that I received the name "Mr. Fish." I have a coin as a symbol on my office door.
I look toward retirement, but I still working on fish and hope try over the years.

Bat Facts Revealed In Science Museum Show

If you tell someone he's blind as a bat, you may actually be paying him a compliment.

Some bats see quite well. Others may not have the best eyesight, but they don't have to - they see by hearing.

This unusual feat - and some other bat facts - are fully explained in a new exhibit just put on display at Boston's Museum of Science.

Gift of an anonymous donor, and entitled simply, "Bats," the exhibit is a life-size diorama depicting 30 Little Brown Bats and one Big Brown Bat at roost in the dim corner of a deserted woodshed. It is one in a series of small mammal dioramas whose scenes catch the animals in characteristic poses.

This realistic exhibit was prepared by Joseph A. Spicer Jr., of the Museum's exhibit staff. Taxidermy is by Robert Bernath and Edward Shaw.

The scene is set shortly before daybreak, on a midsummer's morning. Most of the bats are still at rest, hanging from the shed's rafters, but some are just beginning to stir. A Big Brown Bat is seen in mid-air, darting past his smaller cousins, probably hunting insects.

The Museum label, asking the intriguing question, "How's your batting average?" answers some age-old bat queries and sets right a few bat fallacies.

Explaining how bats see by hearing, the Museum label explains that they do it by a build-in sonar, or sounding device. Their ultra-high-pitched cries bounce off objects in the dark. By hearing the echo, the bats know exactly which way to fly to catch or avoid an object.

Other facts: Bats are not flying mice. They are not even closely related to mice. They are, however, the world's only flying mammals. (So-called flying squirrels do not fly; they glide.)

Vampire Bats of Central and South America do not suck blood; they drink it. They bite their victim first, then lap the flowing blood.

Most bats are tiny, weighing less than an ounce; but some in the tropics are giants, weighing over two pounds and having a six-foot wingspread.

Finally, there's one old wives' tale you can forget. Bats do not tangle themselves in women's hair.

The Museum label also adds one word of caution. Like all mammals, bats are capable of transmitting rabies, and even a small bite can be dangerous. For this reason, warns the Museum, never handle a bat with your bare hands.

Artists May Try Contest

All artists, amateur or professional, are invited to submit designs in the annual Tuberculosis Christmas Seal Design Competition which once again will award $1,000 to the winner. The design selected will be used to spearhead the 1968 Annual Christmas Seal Campaign and will be reproduced billions of times. The designs are used as Christmas Seals for letters, Christmas cards and packages, in posters, newspapers, national publications and is widely shown on television.

Mrs. Barbara G. Flagg, executive director of the Essex County Health Association, Inc., local tuberculosis agency which provides service to 31 communities in Essex County, in announcing the competition says "In the past few years we have had good response in this area. I would like to point out though that the deadline for the competition is October 1, 1966. Designs must be in accordance with specifications which are now available at our office and which will be mailed out on request."

In addition to the $1,000 award, Certificates of Merit are awarded to the remaining nine top designs.

Further information and specifications should be requested from: Mrs. Eleanor H. Spaulding, Program Director, Essex County Health Association, Inc., 222 Cabot Street, Beverly, Mass., 01915. Mrs. Spaulding invites anyone wishing to see designs used in previous years, to visit the office any week day between 9:00 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Tuition in the school of experience is not demanded in advance, but is collected somewhere along the line.

The SAAB can do things other cars wouldn't dare do.

On any road, in any weather, SAAB is a more daring car to drive because SAAB has front-wheel drive. The fantastic traction of front-wheel drive lets SAAB hold on to the road for dear life. (Your dear life.)

Other cars don't give you, even as options, all the safety features that are standard in SAAB. For example, roll-over construction, collapsible steering column, three separate braking systems.

On country roads and on super-highways, SAAB is a safe and daring car. (And SAAB also dares those so-called economy cars to match its low operating cost.) SAAB

Elementary Texts Criticised

A significant number of American elementary school textbooks present an unrealistic picture of the world and are tinged with racism and anti-democratic, anti-foreign and anti-intellectual attitudes to judge by findings of a special project staff at the Lincoln Filene Center, Tufts University.

As part of a survey sponsored by the U. S. Office of Education, the project staff found that the 24 texts studied generally failed to present the values necessary to "intelligent literacy and understanding in group relations."

Headed by Dr. John S. Gibson, acting director of the Center, the staff consists of Dr. Jean D. Grambs, associate professor of education at the University of Maryland, and personnel from the Center.

According to the study, the great majority of the texts communicate the following values:

1. That the most important thing a child can be is clean and well-mannered.
2. That the ideal American family is characterized mainly by cooperativeness, cleanliness, safety-orientedness, and white skin.
3. That the ideal American family has been here for a long time, lives at a point fairly remote from its relatives, and owns its own home.
4. That America got to be the way it is today because of the ax, the hoe, the plow, and the gun, aided by thrift, endurance, and bravery in the face of overwhelming physical and natural odds.
5. That the fact that other

Youth Works As Volunteer

Stephen Matthews Foster of 10 Smithshire Estates, is volunteering his summer as one of twelve participants in the Unitarian Universalist Service Committee's (UUSC) Mexican Work Camp Project.

For the third summer UUSC is sending university student volunteers to Mexico. This year, the students will be involved in a community development project in Patzucaro, Michoacan, where they will construct buildings for a new secondary agricultural school. In addition, the group will serve as teachers' assistants in the village schools and conduct literacy classes and recreation programs in the nearby villages.

This unit is one of thirteen summer work projects sponsored by the Unitarian Universalist Service Committee in Eastern Europe, Honduras, Germany, Jordan, Mexico and the U. S.

Tax Benefits For Teachers

Summer school expenses of teachers may be deductible on Federal income tax returns, says William E. Williams, District Director of Internal Revenue for Massachusetts.

If the course or courses are taken to maintain or improve the skills required in performing the duties of the taxpayer's present employment, or to meet the express requirements of the employer to retain current salary, status or employment, then the expenses are deductible, Mr. Williams said.

Educational expenses include amounts spent for tuition, books, supplies, laboratory fees and certain travel and transportation costs.

If the education or training is countries have not arrived at the same degree of cleanliness, well-manneredness, safety, cooperativeness, private ownership, thrift, endurance, and bravery as we are somehow their fault, makes of us a superior breed of people, and precludes an opportunity for the good life anywhere else.

6. That those people of the national origins first represented on this continent - English, Dutch, Spanish, and French - are the most ingenious, thrifty, and brave groups of all. The role they played in the early exploration and settlement of the country completely outshines in degree and kind the role played by any group which arrived after the trees were cut down, the land parceled out, and the Indians subdued.

7. That because at that time the role of the Negro in the taming of the land and in economic expansion was acceptably the role of the slave, whatever qualities he may have exhibited are not of as much importance or interest to us as the bravery and endurance exhibited by the free men of that age.

8. That the Negro is slowly but surely "earning" his place in American society.

9. That the curious, the innovative, the intelligent consider atomic power, the sea, and outer space to be the most compelling fields of inquiry - and the fields in which our efforts for progress need most to be invested.

In their treatment of colonial American history, the texts fail to present adequately the concept of freedom, or the kind of legitimate dissent in which the American concept of equality was born. The report is critical of the underlying undertaken to obtain a new position or a substantial advancement in the present position, or to fulfill general educational and personal aspirations, the expenses are not deductible.

Travel as a form of education is usually considered personal in nature and the expenditures are not deductible. This would include travel while a teacher is on sabbatical leave.

Generally, deductible educational expenses should be claimed in Part IV, page 2, Form 1040, with other itemized deductions. They cannot be claimed if the standard deduction is used.

The cost of travel, meals and lodging while away from home overnight for qualified educational expenses may be allowable and be claimed on Part III, Page 2, Form 1040, whether or not the standard deduction is used.

theme that a conquering of native forces, whether in pioneer or in space in the future, solve the problems of man and society.

The American Indian is represented in stereotypes in the findings report, and few books make any attempt to follow up life of the Indians after wrangles with the settlers. Likewise, the American Negro appears only when he is useful to the white man - as a slave in an agricultural society, someone to be freed at time of the Civil War, a problem during Reconstruction. He appears again only at the Supreme Court Decision in 1954.

Ethnic groups which migrated later than the first wave settlers, who displayed the honored virtues of bravery and endurance, are likewise excluded from getting "equal time" in texts. The new "color-me-brown" I'm integrated" texts, which present the Negro as a slightly darker white man and keep him at a distance from the nice neighborhood, are also attacked for tokenism.

The provisional report containing these findings is one segment of a curriculum development program sponsored by the Office of Education - "The Development of Instructional Materials Pertaining to Race and Culture in American and carried out by the project staff.

life of the Indians after wrangles with the settlers. Li-wise, the American Negro ap-only when he is useful to the whiman - as a slave in an agricultusociety, someone to be freed at time of the Civil War, a probappears again only at the Supre-Court Decision in 1954.

Ethnic groups which migra-later than the first wave of settlers, who displayed the tim-honored virtues of bravery, en-texts. The new "color-me-bro-present the Negro as a slightly dar-

Bowling is a sport for the entire family, and you can enjoy it at its fullest at the Andover Recreation Center, 34 Park Street in Andover. Several summer bowling leagues are enjoying the cool, air conditioned comfort at the Andover Recreation. There are still plenty of lanes available, however, for those who wish to drop in and bowl a few strings to keep in shape or pass a few hours in pleasant, competitive recreation. The Andover Recreation also has a billiard room that is completely air conditioned. Both pocket and carom tables are available, so whatever your preference, drop in any time and shoot a few billiards. Although the sport of bowling has not changed much over the years, the Andover Recreation certainly has. The Andover bowling alley had only four bowling lanes when it was first established on Essex Street in 1916. Since then, they have moved to their present modern white building at 34 Park Street and have expanded to 15 beautifully finished bowling lanes and four lively cushioned billiard tables. Bowlers can rent or buy famous make bowling shoes, balls and accessories that will improve their score and increase their enjoyment of the game. Regular bowlers always love a tournament, and the Andover Recreation each year hosts the Andover Classic, a fine tournament that draws all the finest New England bowlers to compete for valuable prizes and beautiful trophies. Starting in the fall and running throughout the winter months, there is the Father-Son League every Sunday. Bowling at the Andover Recreation is inexpensive, too, only 25 cents a string during the day, and 35 cents in the evening. Special rates are given to birthday parties and special gatherings. During the summer months, the Andover Recreation is on special summer hours, open from noon till 11 P.M. daily. So why not phone 475-9706 and inquire about joining or starting a league? And when you are on vacation, be sure to take the whole family to the air conditioned Andover Recreation Center, 34 Park Street in Andover.

Gallery Reinstalls Exhibit Explaining Art Criticisms

The exhibition, "Terms of Criticism," has been reinstalled at the Addison Gallery of American Art, Phillips Academy, and will continue to be shown through the 3rd of October.

The purpose of the exhibit, as noted in the introductory explanatory label, is to provide "a clearer understanding of what critical terms actually mean by illustrating them with specific objects of art" and at the same time to furnish "a clearer insight to the nature of art through different ways of thinking about it." Accordingly, drawings, paintings and sculpture are displayed with a series of brief comments discussing each work of art from a particular point of view. Such terms as simile, metaphor, hyperbole, meiosis, allegory, exposition, satire, irony, objectivity, subjectivity, and some five dozen similar terms, are examples of the sort of vocabulary which tends to bedevil teacher and pupil alike.

The introduction cautions the reader that although such terms may be considered as "signposts that identify methods of analyzing, they are words ordinarily used in analyzing writing and do not often serve in the criticism of painting or sculpture. Consequently, the exhibition runs the risk of producing misleading inferences." And it is at this point that the visiting language teacher must step in. Nevertheless, the chief intent of the exhibit, as an educational display, is to help the teacher emphasize "the importance of ideas or concepts which find expression in different ways according to the kind of medium employed - sights, sounds, words," and so to help him broaden his students' horizons and develop their powers of clear thinking.

Among the 84 works culled from the Addison Gallery Collection to construct the exhibit are drawings by such a variety of artists as George Bellows, Arthur Dove, Robert Motherwell, Saul Steinberg, Thomas Nast; paintings by Washington Allston, Asher Durand, Thomas Eakins, Hans Hofmann, Edward Hopper, George Luks, Charles Sheeler, Mark Tobey; sculpture by Alexander Archipenko, Alexander Calder, John Flannagan, Dimitri Hadzi, Gaston Lachaise, Augustus St. Gaudens, Hugh Townley; all are counterposed, not according to style or date, but in relation to the particular, critical term each has been selected to illuminate. Installed in this fashion, the exhibition affords even the seasoned person in the field of art a fresh opportunity to examine well-known examples from an unexpected and, hopefully, enlightening point of view. From this standpoint, the exhibition should be of interest to teachers and students of art, as well as of English and other languages.

The Addison Gallery is open free to the public at all times: 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Mondays through Saturdays; 2:30 to 5 p.m. Sundays.

Building, $100,000; the stores along Post Office Avenue, $40,000; and Heifetz' property, $10,000.

Another Voice

Fred Yunggebauer, who operates Andover Market on Elm Street and owns the buildings which houses it, Atlas Hardware and the Andover Spa, says on the other hand that he believes his property is worth twice the $60,000 estimated as its worth in the listing prepared by the manager. He says he will fight any move to include this area in a town hall proposal not only because of the incoming producing value of the location to him as owner but also because there is not another satisfactory location for his market in downtown Andover.

Most of the merchants in the variety of properties that may or may not be included in a land taking request share his sentiments. They protested in a recent meeting with the selectmen that there is no place for them to go if the town moves into this prime location.

And so it continues. In the background is some politicking over the final siting of the new central fire station, already approved by town meeting for construction on Stevens Street.

Selectman Sidney P. White, vocally opposed to this spot, favors acquiring the old Tyer Rubber warehouse from Contractor C. Lincoln Giles. It could be that some vote trading will be involved in the ultimate settling of the TH and fire station questions. Giles is not prepared to say exactly what he would want for the Main Street property, but others have said $150,000 would probably be a minimum.

He did say last week that if the Selectmen were serious about his place, they would have to commit themselves shortly as he is proceeding with reconstruction of the brick warehouse as an apartment building. Work on this project had been idled for a long period until about two weeks ago.

The Andover contractor added that he thought it would be impractical to consider the warehouse location for a firehouse alone. He suggested it would make more sense as a single site for the town hall, the fire station and the police station.

And back at Town Hall there are those who wager that nothing at all will be done. That they will be doing business at the same old stand for some time to come.

If history is a fortune teller rather than a teacher, they are betting on a sure thing.

Old Orchard Changes Hands

The century old Downing estate on Route 125 has changed hands.

Robert J. Burke, North Andover real estate agent, reported this week that the land once occupied by the largest apple orchard in Andover has been sold to John J. Segadei, Andover and North Andover home builder.

Burke's office said the builder has plans filed calling for construction of 56 homes on the 43 acres.

The farm, once the property of the late James Downing, was sold by Mrs. Joanna C. Downing Foster of Andover.

They say the flight of time cannot be arrested—but anybody can stop in a minute.
